UM to appeal arbitration of Wiles case

By DOUG O'HARRA
Montana Kaimin Reporter

An arbitration hearing for a grievance filed on behalf of Jon Wiles, University of Montana professor of education, was postponed indefinitely yesterday morning after UM legal counsel decided to appeal the decision to arbitrate.

According to Joan Jonkel, the University Teachers' Union attorney, UM decided to appeal the decision after arguing unsuccessfully that Wiles' grievance was not arbitrable under the contract between the UTU and UM.

Wiles' grievance states that his position was eliminated in retaliation for exercising his right to file grievance under the contract.

During a closed pre-hearing meeting between Jonkel, federal arbitrator Joseph Sinclitico and UM Legal Counsel George Mitchell, Mitchell argued that Wiles had not yet entered the grievance process when his position was eliminated, therefore the grievance was not arbitrable, Jonkel said.

But Sinclitico ruled that Wiles' grievance can be arbitrated, Jonkel said, and Mitchell then announced that UM would appeal that decision.

Mitchell would not comment on the decision to appeal, or say when UM would file the appeal. He said it was university policy for counsel not to comment on pending litigation.

UM Academic Vice President Donald Habbe said he assumed it would take some time to file the appeal, but declined to comment further.

James Walsh, professor of psychology and grievance officer for the UTU, said the UTU will pursue the appeal as rapidly as possible so that the arbitration will begin soon. Walsh said he is very optimistic about the UTU's chances of winning the appeal. "We feel the weight of the evidence is in our favor," he said.

Wiles said he felt UM's appeal was going to make the arbitration more difficult. He said there must have been about 15 people ready to testify at the hearing for each side, adding that "the chances of getting all those people together again is reduced."

Basis for the grievance began last spring, when Wiles' tenure was undergoing evaluation. Walsh said the evaluation was behind schedule, and that he told Habbe that the UTU would file a formal grievance if the evaluation process wasn't completed soon. A few days later, Wiles' position was eliminated through retrenchment.

Retrenchment is the cutting of tenured faculty for financial reasons, and is initiated by the central UM administration.

According to Jonkel, the contract states that there will be "no reprisals for participants in the grievance process." She said that since Wiles had not filed a formal grievance at the time of elimination of his position, Mitchell contended that Wiles was not involved in the "grievance process," and therefore, was not entitled to arbitration.

Jonkel said Wiles' grievance involves more than just retaliation for filing grievances. UTU's opening statement for the ar-

CB will rebut intern's letter opposing building fees bill

By SUSAN TOFT
Montana Kaimin Reporter

Central Board voted last night at a special meeting to sent a letter to the Senate Finance and Claims Committee rebutting the position taken in an earlier letter from University of Montana student Cathie Nelson to members of that committee.

Saying that "misstatements of fact have been made and should be corrected," ASUM lobbyist Mike Dahlem outlined nine points to be addressed in a letter.

Nelson, legislative intern in the commissioner of higher education's office, wrote that she strongly opposed House Bill 727, which would have given a voice to students regarding building fees expenditures. The bill was killed by the committee last week.

Dahlem said the fact that the letter was written on office stationery from the Commissioner of Higher Education's office, for which Nelson has already written an apology to the Senate committee, should be disregarded. Instead, CB should focus on what he called the "accuracy and content of the letter."

The nine alleged inaccuracies outlined by Dahlem:

- Nelson said a group of five students who helped create the bill "maintain they represent all students on this bill." Dahlem labeled this statement "false," saying that the bill was "unanimously endorsed" by Central Board and received wide support from many students.

- the "select few" which Nelson alleged runs ASUM. Dahlem called this charge "demonstrably untrue," indicating that the existence of CB itself contradicted Nelson's statement.

- that the five students who "run ASUM" perpetuate an us vs. them" attitude in regard to students and the Board of Regents and the university administration. Dahlem said that ASUM has maintained close relations with the university president and the commissioner's office.

- those five students, Nelson said in the letter, "stress that they are being suppressed by the administration, along with the Board of Regents." Dahlem said that this claim has never been made by the alleged "select few" or anyone else in student government.

- that the 15 percent student turnout in February's elections is not a representative sample of UM students. Dahlem said the CB that endorsed HB 727 was elected by a 25 percent turnout in the student elections last year. Eric Johnson, ASUM vice president, said the 15 percent figure is still representative of the student body because it is the "student's prerogative and responsibility to turn out for elections."

- that ASUM committees "were not filled at all." Dahlem said that had Nelson said that "committees were not all filled," it would have been a correct statement.

Student fees may finance MontPIRG

By HEIDI BENDER
Montana Kaimin Reporter

Student efforts to establish a campus Montana Public Interest Research Group financed by a refundable student-fee system kicked into gear at a meeting last night.

MontPIRG, which would be a non-partisan, non-profit citizenship corporation legally recognized by the state as an independent group, would consist of student members who would work with student-hired professionals. It would emphasize student research, lobbying, and public education on public interest issues ranging from consumer protection to human rights to governmental effectiveness.

A MontPIRG was established at University of Montana in the 1970s, but was dissolved in 1976 due to inadequate funds. At that time it was funded on a student donation system.

Funds for MontPIRG would come from a special refundable fee collected by the university at registration. Students opposed to using their money for the group would be able to get a refund in the second or third week of the quarter.

A petition drive for student signatures favoring this funding proposal will begin Wednesday. Information concerning Mont-

PIRG's goals and benefits will be distributed today and tomorrow from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. in the University Center Mall.

Gordon Gregory, a graduate in journalism and a member of the MontPIRG steering committee, said it needs the support of at least 50 percent of UM students. It will then need to gain support of the faculty and the administration before the funding proposal goes before the Board of Regents for approval. As the Board of Regents meets in the middle of May, MontPIRG must have the petitions done by the end of this month, he said.

If the regents approve the proposal, the fee will be included on registration forms next fall.

The students at last night's meeting also approved MontPIRG's articles of incorporation which will be filed with the secretary of state sometime next week.

Jon Motl, a graduate in environmental studies, said that about 110 students have indicated interest in organizing MontPIRG. He said that MontPIRG is an "organizational means in which we can influence public policy in Montana."

Students in 23 states on over 115 campuses have already organized PIRGs.

Motl cited the New York PIRG's successful efforts in lobbying for New York's truth-in-testing bill which removed unfair practices it discovered in the standardized testing industry, which tests student skills.

MontPIRG would be intended to expand on a statewide basis. Motl said that it would give students a voice on issues they feel are important to them and the community. He also said that it would be an educational experience for the students involved in MontPIRG.

Eagle delayed

The Montana Eagle, a new statewide weekly newspaper, will be available late Friday in the University of Montana Liberal Arts Building.

The paper was scheduled to come out yesterday, but was delayed by printing difficulties. The first three issues will be free.

Don't mow over higher education

A sad thing is happening to education. No longer are institutions of higher learning being regarded, let alone operated, as places to widen one's understanding of the world around him. They are seen as businesses, to be run as efficiently and cost-effective as any large conglomerate.

Recently David McLaughlin was chosen as president of Dartmouth College. McLaughlin, chairman of the board of trustees at the college, is probably an able administrator and manager. However, McLaughlin was the chief executive officer of the Toro Co.

Toro makes lawnmowers and snow removal equipment.

Such an appointment is part of a growing trend to pit the ethereal goals of higher education against the rules of a money-hungry society. McLaughlin is evidently capable of running a profit-making operation, but will he remember the true purposes of a college education in his administration of Dartmouth? And will he deal effectively and appropriately with the social and political problems colleges and universities face in addition to financial considerations?

Colleges and universities are facing critical problems now: Reagan's budget cuts threatening everything from research programs to financial aid for college students; limited university budgets that are forcing faculty retrenchment; college professors being pressured to deal with students who often cannot read or write adequately; and college enrollments that are expected to decrease substantially by the mid-80s as the lowered birth rate of the '60s catches up with school systems.

The list goes on and on.

There is no question that higher education is big business. According to a report sponsored by 23 national higher education associations which reviewed the financial trends of the '70s, colleges and universities across the nation have combined operating budgets of $50 billion. Such a financial base, they claim, rivals the country's mighty auto, agriculture or communications industries.

The University of Montana is now in the process of selecting a new president. The search committee has stipulated that the presidential nominees hold the final degree in their field, display evidence of scholarly accomplishment in their field, and demonstrate the experience necessary to represent the diverse special interest groups on campus, among others.

Higher education needs to be more than rigidly preparing people with the technical minds to make big bucks. A good education should encompass an understanding of history to better understand the future and the philosophies of past and present.

The UM Presidential Search Committee must keep these goals in mind. Financial finesse is important but should not be the most important determining factor for employment at this traditionally liberal arts school.

Scavenger hunt

Editor: HELP! I am involved in a scavenger hunt. One of the items that I have to find is lyrics of "Ballad of a Young Man" as sung by Helen Ramsey.

I have written to the Library of Congress, copyright division, over 50 record finders on both coasts, several radio stations and numerous magazines and unions connected with the music world. No success.

Perhaps one of your readers has heard of the song and/or the artist and would write to me to the address below. A prompt response would be appreciated as there is a deadline involved.

NPS policy

Editor: In years past I worked as an upper-level permanent staff member for the private concessions in various western parks. My position with these companies was to ensure maximum profits while circumventing the National Park Service policy whenever necessary. We were there to make money. The "services" we rendered and the employees we hired were all there for one purpose, to make money. The concessions are not in the National Parks to preserve and protect, but to make money!

As reported in the Sunday Missoulian, James Watt, Secretary of the Interior, publicly advocated several proposals to alter National Park policy:

- return some newly acquired Urban Gateway Parks to state and local governments whether or not these local governments want or can afford to manage these areas.

- increase visitation to remaining National Park areas.

- increase the amount of control over National Park policy by the privately owned concessions.

These proposals offend and infuriate me. Returning any National Park lands, even local urban areas, to state and local governments is a dangerous precedent, especially in these times when pressure to explore, mine and develop is becoming stronger despite the possible long term effects. One of the growing problems in the National Park system is the tremendous growth in visitor use.

It will be increasingly difficult for the National Park Service to observe its mandate to "Protect and Preserve for Future Generations" when there is nothing left untrampled to protect and preserve. Yet Watt desires more visitation.

The benefactor of increased visitation of course, will be the park concessionaires. Originally they were let in to perform services for the public. The National Park Service acknowledged that to remain viable the business must make a profit, and to insure the parks would not become shopping malls the National Park Service developed the "Prime Concessionaire Policy" where one or two concessions supply most of the services needed.

The privilege of operating in the parks was soon abused and the Park Service had to respond with policies to protect the public from violations in safety, health and pricing. To this day, most of the major corporations who run the concessions (Music Corporation of America, Greyhound, TransWorld Airlines, Rockresorts; owned by the Rockefellers) retain a staff of attorneys to protect their employers' interests when they conflict with those of the National Park Service and often, the general public. One has only to visit the major National Parks and observe the deplorable conditions of the public and employee structures, sample the services and talk with concession employees, to see the effect of this constant confrontation between concessions and the National Park Service.

These are the people to whom James Watt wants to give control of our National Parks. Remember that the money to be made in the typical short season is more readily made in tacky curio shops and fast food stands than in the services provided by concessions contract. Imagine yourself the numerous scenarios that might develop with a private concession the deciding factor in National Park policy.

The concession has the right to protect their interests and to have their opinions heard on formulating National Park policy. They do NOT have the right to formulate National Park policy, nor should they. They are there by contract to provide a service to the public! National Park policy should not be made with them alone in mind.

If you love your National Parks and you worry about what might become of them, get involved. Write or call your elected representatives. Write James Watt, tell him that the National Parks belong to the people not to major corporations. Remember the mandate of the National Park Service. "To protect and preserve the Future Generations." Please help.

TAs to receive salary raise

University of Montana teaching assistants will receive next year a raise of $769 in their minimum salary, which will make UM better able to compete with other Rocky Mountain schools for TAs, Raymond Murray, dean of the Graduate School, said yesterday.

Murray, who is also UM assistant vice president of research, said the minimum salary for the 1981-82 academic year will be increased from $3,231 to $4,000 for the 196 TA positions on campus.

Murray said he does not know how many TAs are receiving minimum salaries because academic departments hire fewer people than positions in order to pay them higher salaries. He said this practice is done in some of the more competitive areas on campus in order to attract quality people for the positions, who otherwise might go to the other schools for higher pay.

The salary increase was approved last week by UM Academic Vice President Donald Habbe. A request for the increase was made by the Graduate School in January. Murray said money for the increase will be taken out of next year's budget. He said he was "very pleased" with the increase, adding that before the pay raise UM was below the average in TA salaries for the Rocky Mountain region. Murray said he was not sure of the exact average salary figure.

The UM minimum salaries for TAs have been increased $1,200 over the past three years. The 1978-79 salary was $2,800 and was raised to $3,502 in 1979-80.

Few applying for scholarships

By VICKI HARRIMAN
Montana Kaimin Reporter

Up to 15 scholarships for University of Montana and high school students are available from the UM Foundation, but few have applied for the scholarships because students are unaware of them, Gayle Walton, assistant director of the UM Foundation, said yesterday.

For this year's scholarships, students must inquire at the UM Financial Aids Office by April 15.

The UM Foundation has notified UM faculty members and students and high school seniors about the scholarships, but Walton said these notifications have not increased the number of applicants. She said a lack of publicity has resulted in a small number of applicants, and that the foundation needs to publicize on a wider basis.

To solve the publicity problem, UM President Richard Bowers appointed a 10-member Scholarship Committee composed mostly of faculty members. The committee's job is to increase other faculty members' knowledge of the scholarships, and to encourage students to apply.

Walton said she has received "good cooperation" from the Scholarship Committee in its help with the applications and keeping track of applicants and potential scholarship recipients.

UM Foundation also notifies students of scholarships through high school counselors and publicizes the scholarships during UM Days.

UM Days is a three-day visit by Montana high school students to the university. This year it will be held today through Saturday.

Walton said she also plans on establishing a computer system to speed up paperwork and to see where the scholarships are needed in Montana.

Five scholarship funds have been donated to the UM Foundation from various people in Montana. From these five funds, as many as nine scholarships are awarded annually to incoming and current UM students.

For the 1981-82 school year, the scholarships awarded will be:

- D. J. Shultz Scholarship fund of $10,000; two $500 scholarships based on academic standing and financial need will be awarded to two people who are future or present UM students from Big Sandy.

- R. J., Susan and Glen Van Bramer Scholarship fund of $50,000; two $500 scholarships based on academic standing and financial need will be awarded to two sophomores and juniors from Yellowstone County.

- Lulu Miles Scholarship fund of $65,000; nine scholarships based on academic standing, with amounts varying from $400 to $500, will be awarded to future UM students who are graduates of Helena High School.

- Sumner Gerard Scholarship annual fund of $1,000; one $1,000 scholarship based on academic standing will be awarded to one UM graduate or undergraduate with ranching background from either Beaverhead, Madison or Yellowstone counties.

- Marie Holder Scholarship fund of $9,000; one $800 scholarship based on academic standing will be awarded to one future or present UM student from Park County.

Court to decide fate of aid to handicapped

College Press Service

The fate of all federal college programs for helping handicapped students will be in the balance when the U.S. Supreme Court decides the case of deaf student Walter Camenisch, who wants the University of Texas to pay $1,245 a year for his sign-language interpreter.

Texas claims that schools are not required to spend money to accommodate handicapped students. That view, if validated in court, would change the standard interpretation of the 1973 Rehabilitation Act, the high court said.

Under Section 504 of that act, federally funded schools can't discriminate against "otherwise qualified" handicapped persons. The 5th U.S. Court of Appeals decided last fall that Camenisch is entitled to a free interpreter under Section 504, but Texas disagrees.

"An institution is not required to take any affirmative compliance steps by accepting federal funds," reads the school's petition for high court review.

Should the Supreme Court accept that view, warns the Justice Department, "it would signal the end of all compulsory measures to aid the handicapped."

Additionally, Justice reminded Texas that it is free to forego federal funds if it feels that accompanying regulations are too burdensome.

Killer game may encourage violence

College Press Service

AMHERST, Mass. — After going from campus to campus without much controversy, the new student fad game called KAOS (Killing As An Organized Sport) has been banned at the University of Massachusetts-Amherst.

The university's student government has recommended that the game, which student Stuart Sajdak tried to organize early in March, "should not be advertised, sanctioned or tolerated."

The government criticized the game — sometimes called Killer or Assassin on other campuses — as encouraging violence.

Similar criticism broke out when the game was introduced at the University of Florida in February. Oregon State University is the only other campus known to have actually banned the game, though it subsequently replaced the game with another version called "The Secret Smooch" to celebrate Valentine's Day.

Sajdak told the U Mass Daily Collegian he was going to write a formal charter for the game, and try to get the student government to change its mind about recognizing game participants as a formal student group.

Exile to speak at Brown Bag

A Philippine exile who has advocated stopping U.S. military support to her country is scheduled to speak here on Tuesday.

Charito Planas, who escaped from the Philippines in 1978, will speak about the various facets of U.S.-Philippine relations, including the U.S. military and economic aid to the regime of President Ferdinand Marcos, the presence of U.S. bases, the proposed construction of a Westinghouse nuclear reactor in the Philippines and the activities of giant multinational corporations.

Before escaping to the United States, Planas had been imprisoned for 14 months in the Philippines without any charges being filed. After being released, she ran in the Philippine April 1978 elections and criticized Marcos' wife for her personal extravagance and corruption. This criticism caused her to be the target of another arrest warrant, forcing her to flee.

Planas has been active in the anti-Marcos movement abroad since her escape.

A member of a wealthy Manila family, Planas said she is working for the interests of the majority of her compatriots, the ordinary working people and farmers. Now living in Washington, she lives the unsettled existence of a political rebel.

Planas will speak at noon in University Center Room 215, as part of a Women's Resource Center Brown Bag discussion, and again at 7 p.m. in the Women's Center. Her appearance is sponsored by the Student Action Center, the Women's Resource Center, Montanans for Peace in El Salvador and the Missoula Women for Peace.

Reagan high spirited, eager to work

WASHINGTON (AP) — Despite some pain and fatigue, a high-spirited President Ronald Reagan got out of bed and set to work in his hospital suite yesterday, signing an executive order, conferring with staff members and planning a major trip in just three weeks.

White House physician Daniel Ruge declared late in the day that "the president continues to make excellent progress toward full recovery" from the bullet wound which punctured his left lung in Monday's assassination attempt. "He has experienced some pain, which is normal for an injury and surgery of this type. He is now resting comfortably," Ruge said.

Earlier, Vice President George Bush said after a visit that "the president is doing so well . . . it's really amazing."

Meanwhile, James Brady, the presidential press secretary who was shot in the head during the assassination attempt, was making a "truly exceptional" recovery and may regain more mental functions than had been hoped, brain specialists said. He remained in critical condition and his doctors said they were "cautiously optimistic."

John Hinckley Jr., charged with trying to kill Reagan, underwent three hours of psychiatric testing to determine if he is competent to stand trial. He is being held at the Quantico, Va., Marine base.

Reagan was moved into a private room in a surgical ward and a "full-time office" was set up nearby for staff members, according to presidential counselor Edwin Meese III. Meese said the president may be sent home from the George Washington University Hospital early next week.

White House chief of staff James Baker III and his deputy,

Michael Deaver, who with Meese make up the trio that directs the White House and administration operations, spent about 10 minutes with the president shortly after 7 a.m. At that time, the president signed an executive order granting lower import tariffs for products from developing nations.

At the White House, Bush filled in at the president's only previously scheduled appointment for the day, presiding at a National Security Council meeting he would have attended anyway. Reagan was originally scheduled to speak to the Illinois Legislature in Springfield.

Deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes said plans were going ahead for a Reagan meeting scheduled for April 27 and 28 in San Diego, Calif., with Mexican President Jose Lopez-Portillo.

The White House took over "virtually a whole corridor" at the hospital, Speakes said. All told, 11 rooms were set aside for White House use. There were lots of jelly beans — Reagan's favorite confection — in the room, assistant White House press secretary Mark Weinberg said.

In addition, there is an office across the corridor for White House appointments secretary David Fisher by Helen von Damm, the president's personal assistant, and rooms for a military assistant, for Reagan's personal physician, and for a communications center.

First Lady Nancy Reagan was also given a sitting room nearby, and other rooms were set aside for consultation and for Secret Service agents.

Speakes refused to say what floor the president was on.

A White House medical bulletin issued in the morning said "the president is in good condition but is experiencing some pain and fatigue in response to his injury. The president slept well during the night and is up and walking this morning."

While initial reports of the president's first 24 hours in the hospital seven blocks west of the White House portrayed him as often being in a joking mood and the White House sought to portray a "business as usual" picture, cracks began to appear in that image.

Speakes said, "I can assure you from my personal knowledge there hasn't been any attempt to paint a rosier picture. The reports from the hospital have been as accurate as we can make them."

But the New York Times reported that the president had trouble breathing, chest pain, falling blood pressure and was spitting up blood when he walked into the hospital after being shot.

"He definitely was in a life-threatening situation," the newspaper quoted Dr. William O'Neill as saying. "But he was very rapidly stabilized."

In addition, there were questions about just how much work the president was accomplishing.

Speakes said Reagan read newspapers and the White House news summary and watched television in the morning.

Meese, asked what documents the president was likely to be shown, said, "we will only take those things to him that require his decision." But he predicted the president would like to see more.

Intellectually I know that America is no better than any other country; emotionally I know she is better than every other country.

Military moves off UCLA campus

College Press Service

LOS ANGELES — A branch of the U.S. Army that recruits law students at the University of California-Los Angeles has moved off campus in order to "avoid confrontation" with university prohibitions against discriminating against homosexuals.

U.S. Armed Forces policy is "to refuse to induct individuals with homosexual tendencies," says Capt. Thomas Warren, recruiter for the Army's Judicial Advocates General Corps. But university policy implemented last June bars groups that discriminate against gay students from all nine University of California campuses.

Warren said he sees the move off campus as "temporary," until "the issue is settled."

The incident was only the latest in a recent series of controversies concerning the presence of both military interests and gay groups on campuses around the country.

At the University of Maryland last week, for example, a student government committee decided to cut the budget of the campus Women's Center by 41 percent

"because some of the members are lesbians," according to Jayne Seebach, a committee member.

Seebach told the committee that she supported the cut because other Maryland women "are leery about going to the Women's Center because of the lesbians."

Shortly before the Maryland committee met, a Washington, D.C., court found Georgetown University guilty of violating a city law prohibiting discrimination against gays.

Georgetown, a Jesuit university, has refused to recognize gay students as a student group because homosexuality is condemned by Catholic doctrine.

The University of San Francisco, another Catholic school, also recently refused to host a conference of women's studies teachers because some of the teachers were lesbians.

But the UCLA incident managed to incorporate not only elements of the growing national discussion about the place of gays on campus, but the even louder controversy about allowing the military on campus.

The issue, once one of the hottest during the height of the Vietnam War, was almost dormant until the start of the 1980-81 academic year.

Indeed, UCLA was the fourth college in the last three months to kick a branch of the military off campus.

Since December, Washington, Yale and Wayne State have taken action to keep or expel military groups from their campuses.

New York University and Columbia did the same earlier.

Similarly, there have been large student protests against defense contractors recruiting at the universities of Massachusetts and Colorado.

• Nelson's claim that ASUM's accounting system is a "disaster." Dahlem said that this statement is "untrue and bordering on libel." ASUM Legislative Committee Chairman Bill Bronson added, "This is a different CB now. You people are committed and dedicated to responsible student government where money is handled wisely and efficiently."

• that students would gain control of buildings if the bill were passed. Dahlem said the bill never said students would control buildings — just that they would be given some voice on how student building fees are spent. Dahlem said CB's letter also should express "the responsibility of student government over the years" and its "willingness to work constructively" with the administration and the Board of Regents.

Dahlem also reported on the status of some bills in the Legislature:

- House Bill 818, which would give $600,000 over two years to the work-study programs at the six units of the university system, was tabled by the House Appropriations Committee. Dahlem said that "we (the student lobbyists) will do everything we can to keep the bill alive," but added that he was "not personally optimistic" about its survival.

- House bills 368 and 369, which requested a total of $1.4 million for library acquisitions for the six units were tabled.
- House Bill 319, which would provide funds for the improvement of counseling, tutoring and recreational services for handicapped students, was killed by the appropriations committee.

Senate committee may cut U-funding

HELENA (AP) — A clash between the two houses of the Legislature appeared all but inevitable yesterday after the Senate's chief fiscal committee pumped another $2 million into the budget approved by the House.

First, however, the Senate Finance and Claims Committee will struggle internally over proposed cuts in the state university system. Action on the first of those cuts, amounting to $3.5 million, was delayed until today.

Except for education, the Finance Committee had, by noon, completed its review of the 1982-83 budget bill approved by the House. The Senate panel has added about $4.5 million to the estimated $535 million in spending set by the House Appropriations Committee.

The Appropriations Committee, under orders from the Legislature's Republican leaders, cut $4 million in spending last month. This week 52 of the 57 House Republicans, joined by Hardin Democrat Thomas Conroy, signed a petition urging the Senate to uphold the cuts.

As expected, the university system proved to be the area where some members of the Senate committee will try to make up for their generosity of the past week. The battle was joined when Sen. Harold Dover, R-Lewistown, moved to change the enrollment calculations on which budgets are based, a move that he estimated would cut $3.5 million from the six campuses' budgets in the next two years.

Dover's proposal was to eliminate the "rolling average" that is supposed to insulate schools from drastic budget cuts if enrollments decline, as expected.

After a lengthy argument action on his motion was delayed until today.

The committee came within one vote of shutting off debate on the university system budget. A motion to that effect by Sen. Fred Van Valkenburg, D-Missoula, failed on an 8-8 tie when one of Van Valkenburg's traditional allies, Billings Democrat Pat Regan, voted against him.

She agreed with Finance Chairman Matt Himsl, R-Kalispell, who said, "I don't think you should deprive anybody of the right to be heard."

The strong showing by Van Valkenburg's motion appeared to show widespread support for the university budgets on the Finance committee, thus making any deep cuts questionable at the committee level. Those cuts could be more likely to pass on the Senate floor.

If they do, however, they may force still another confrontation with the House. Rep. Gene Donaldson, R-Helena, has promised that his education budget subcommittee will make any additional cuts by eliminating whole programs at the campuses.

That option has little political appeal and also might pose practical problems, coming in the closing days of the Legislature.

Wiles . . .

bitration states in part that Wiles' dismissal is "politically motivated, stemming from internal dissension within the School of Education."

Wiles, who served as acting dean of the education school prior to Dean Albert Yee's appointment in the fall of 1979, has said that the administration probably felt he was the focal point of dissension within the school, and that was the reason for his dismissal.

Last spring, after a year of faculty dissension over the school's administrative policies and Wiles' retrenchment, the five members of the school's doctoral degree committee resigned. One of those resigning was Wiles. A few weeks later in late Spring Quarter, when Yee was touring China, a majority of the faculty voted "no confidence" in Yee's administration.

Weather or Not

Les tipped forward on his chair and locked onto the edge of his desk like a cat hitting a hot tin roof. The stairs clattered with Dorsey's heavy-soled black and white wingtips. He burst through the door without knocking and Les saw the "Hitchcock & Woodley, Private Investigators" logo staring him in the face, with a missing eyelash and fading pupil.

"Spit it out Dorse. Catch your breath later."

"I found her," gasped Dorsey. Dag and Les pogo-sticked out of their chairs; Dorsey held up a halting hand.

"Hold on to your Fruit-of-the-Looms. Something went wrong."

"Is she . . ."

Dorsey nodded. "And it isn't pretty."

"How bad?"

"High of 45, occasional rain, snow showers tonight, lows near 28 and they deep-sixed the air-pollution predictions!"

"Oh, no," groaned Dag, clutching his forehead with an oversized mitt of a hand.

"I was afraid of this," said a disconsolate Les. "We'd better get our guns."

"And a camera."

Les checked his shoulder holster and his pocket for his red filter. No, it wasn't going to be pretty.
